

Similarities Between Hebrew & Kikongo

Part 3

You will notice that from written in Hebrew to phonetics in Kikongo (Bantu), the last letter of a word is silent or a vowel is added. ex: (Tolad becomes Tola; tekal becomes teka, or tekele; lakam becomes lakama; batak becomes bata or bataka etc.) in addition, the Bantu languages largely use loud sounds, without however altering the word ex :(pelo becomes mpelo; dudu becomes ndundu; kata becomes nkata So when you find eg mpelo, you don't have to read it as "m-pe-lo", but rather as "mpe-lo"; instead of using the French "or", the Kikongo dictionary uses the Italian "u". So "u = or") Regarding vowels , keep in mind that Hebrew is mostly written without vowels, so where the vowels differ slightly, the evaluation parameters necessarily become the consonants (which remain stable)!
